

Managing Groups—The Fast Track

While writing this book, I lost my dear friend, Rudolf Schultz-Pelkum. Like the Tai Chi he practiced, he moved through life with grace, thoughtful intention and deliberateness. His temperament wasn't suited for conflict. He devoted himself to Zen—seeking tranquility and harmony. He supported each person's journey. He was silently proud of his family and children. He awoke each day with a readiness and ease for work and obligation. He left gentle footprints in the sands of this world. Every encounter with him included clever humor and a vulnerable sharing of each of our latest foibles. We loved each other like brothers. Death ends a life—not a relationship.
