

Is your Style Stopping Communication?!

(part of the Couples' Program)

by

Michael Grinder

An easy way to understand how you and your partner interact with each other is to transfer your knowledge of household pets to your marriage. A dog comes when it is called, a cat tends to ignore the invitation unless it is accompanied with the sound of a kitchen can opener.

Being cat-like or dog-like is a style – you and your partner are much more than just a style; your values are more indicative of who you are than your style. Be mindful that the concept of Cat/Dog is a continuum – not pigeon-holes. A practical way to identify what is meant by being cat-like and dog-like is to look at the following table.

Cat-like	mixture	Dog-like
Likes Tension		Likes Tranquility
Drawn to Risk		Drawn to Routines

The following table offers several arenas. Want to do something fun? Have you and your partner fill out this table for each other – then share what you estimated yours and your partner's style was. Put your initial and your partner's initial on each row.

Arena	Extreme Dog (lab/retriever)	Dog	Mixture	Cat	Extreme Cat (Siamese)
Money
Career
Learning
Spiritual
Parenting
Caring for parents
Romance
Fun

Both Gail and I are dogs in the area of money, I am the romantic dog and she is romantic cat, I am mostly a career cat, and Gail is a retired dog.

Enjoy dialoguing with your partner
– have a sense of humor.

Want more – attend “To Love, to Honor, and to Negotiate.”

Visit: www.MichaelGrinder.com/Couples-Workshop/